

Thinking about reporting serious wrongdoing?

If you become aware that something is seriously wrong in the way a public official has acted or is acting, or a NSW public sector organisation has acted or is functioning, it is in the public interest and the organisation's interest that you tell someone who can do something about it. The Public Interest Disclosures Act 1994 (PID Act) has set up a scheme for people who work in the NSW public sector (eg in a department or a local council) to come forward with important information. This fact sheet provides guidance on how to do this.

Before you report wrongdoing

Ask yourself

Is the report covered by the PID Act?

The PID Act is designed to deal with reports about serious matters about public administration, in particular:

- corrupt conduct
- serious maladministration
- serious and substantial waste of public money
- failure to exercise functions properly in accordance with the Government Information (Public Access) Act 2009 (also known as the GIPA Act)
- breach of an obligation imposed by the Local Government Act 1993 in connection with a pecuniary interest.

Your organisation's internal reporting policy should contain information to explain what these terms mean. You could also look on the NSW Ombudsman's website www.ombo.nsw.gov.au.

A report is not covered by the PID Act if:

- it was made primarily to avoid dismissal or disciplinary action
- it contains intentionally false statements or is intended to mislead or attempt to mislead the recipient (these are offences under the PID Act)
- it questions the merits of government policy.

Making your report in accordance with the scheme in the PID Act gives you the best chance of helping the organisation concerned to remedy the situation.

The scheme encourages all those involved to focus on the issues (not the people) involved.

In the spirit of the PID Act, the organisation should take reasonable action to protect you from reprisals.

Remember

The best protection is confidentiality – discretion is essential

- Seek advice from the NSW Ombudsman or from the person responsible for dealing with public interest disclosures in your organisation. Be discreet when you are doing so.
- Be careful in deciding who you report to and how. To be protected under the PID Act your report must be made to specific people (see 'How to report wrongdoing').
- Don't telegraph your intentions. For example, threatening to report may backfire. If you provide your information discreetly, the organisation will be better able to focus on the issues rather than on you.
- Don't tell anyone you are thinking about reporting.

Ask yourself

Do I have evidence to back up my allegations?

It is important that the information you provide is clear, accurate and factual. If you have documents to support your allegations, try to make them available. This will help the organisation focus on the real issues and fix real problems.

Avoid speculation or emotive language: it is likely to divert attention from the real issues.

How to report wrongdoing

I want to report something about the organisation where I work:

- Your organisation is required by law to have an internal reporting policy. The policy will tell you how you should report these matters – for example, whether you can report orally or if you have to put it in writing, and the person you can report these matters to. The policy should also tell you how the report will be handled.
- If you cannot find a copy of the internal reporting policy, or you are reluctant to ask for it, you can report to the principal officer.

I want to report something about another organisation:

You can report:

- to the principal officer of that organisation or of yours
- to a person in that organisation or yours who is responsible for dealing with public interest disclosures
- to the investigating authorities below.

If you don't want to report something internally, you can report it to:

After you report

Confidentiality

The person to whom you reported should keep information that might identify you confidential unless:

- you give your written consent for them to reveal the information
- you have already identified yourself voluntarily
- fairness to other people requires the information to be revealed
- it is necessary to disclose the information in order to investigate the matter
- it is in the public interest to reveal the information.

What if my allegations cannot be investigated without my identity being guessed or revealed?

The person to whom you reported should:

- talk you through the options
- alert you before your identity, or information that may tend to identify you, is revealed as part of the investigation
- take all reasonable steps to protect you against any reprisals in the workplace.

Protection from reprisals

It is a criminal and disciplinary offence for someone to take detrimental action against you substantially in reprisal for you making a public interest disclosure under the PID Act. It is not in the public interest for people to suffer for reporting wrongdoing.

Detrimental action includes taking or threatening action that involves any of the following:

- injury, damage or loss
- intimidation or harassment
- discrimination, disadvantages or adverse treatment in your employment
- dismissal from employment
- disciplinary proceeding.

The organisation to which you reported should take reasonable action to protect you against reprisals. The government and investigating authorities expect this.

The organisation also has obligations under the common law and occupational health and safety legislation to make sure that you do not suffer as a result of coming forward.

What if someone takes or threatens to take reprisals against me?

Complain to the person to whom you reported or to the person who is responsible for dealing with public interest disclosures in your organisation.

If they do not help you or do not take your complaint seriously, complain to the NSW Ombudsman or the Independent Commission Against Corruption. They may be able to use their investigative powers to help. If it is appropriate, they also have the power to apply to the court for an injunction to prevent the detrimental action. They can also advise you whether you could seek assistance from the police to investigate the alleged criminal offence.

Thinking about reporting serious wrongdoing?

Legal action

You may sue someone for taking detrimental action against you substantially in reprisal for having made a public interest disclosure under the PID Act.

Other protections

You do not incur any liability for making a public interest disclosure under the PID Act.

You have a legal defence to any action taken against you, such as defamation or breach of confidence, for making a public interest disclosure under the PID Act.

However, the PID Act will not protect you if you break the law in other ways, for example, if you access someone's computer without authorisation to obtain evidence to support your allegations.

Who can I go to for support?

If you have reported wrongdoing internally, your organisation should nominate a support person. You could also seek support from your union.

When will I be told what's happened to my public interest disclosure?

The organisation to whom you made the public interest disclosure must:

- acknowledge receipt of the public interest disclosure and provide you with a copy of their internal reporting policy within 45 days (but preferably much sooner)
- tell you within six months what action they have taken or propose to take.

If you don't hear from them within six months, contact them and ask them what is happening. If you do not get a response you can complain to the NSW Ombudsman.

What if I'm not happy with the response?

You can complain to the NSW Ombudsman or the Independent Commission Against Corruption about the way your report was handled, particularly if:

- it has been decided that your allegations will not be investigated
- the investigation was not completed within six months
- no recommendations were made for action to be taken despite an investigation
- you were not notified within six months of whether or not the matter was to be investigated.

In these circumstances you can also make a public interest disclosure to a Member of Parliament or a journalist.

However, make sure you seek advice before you do this. To obtain protection for reporting to a Member of Parliament or a journalist, you must be able to prove that the information is substantially true.

Where do I go for further information?

- Within your organisation:

If there is a person in your organisation who is responsible for dealing with public interest disclosures, you should talk to them first.

- You can also contact the NSW Ombudsman for advice about reporting serious wrongdoing:
